Karl Blossfeldt (1865–1932)

Photographer

This extensive collection of plant portraits reveals unexpected shapes and patterns in nature. Karl Blossfeldt (b. 1865, d. 1932 in Germany) took photographs that showcase both scientific precision as well as an artist's eye for composition, and this unique mix became a great success within modern art and photography. He designed his own cameras that allowed him to photograph nature through a looking glass, and his images combined the styles of both Art Nouveau and Modernism. Blossfeldt taught sculpting for most of his life, and his photo collection was first and foremost used to teach his students about the patterns of nature, but after his work had been exhibited in Berlin in 1926, the teacher became an artist. Two years later the book Urformen der Kunst was published, and it became one of the most influential and significant photobooks of the 20th century.

In collaboration with the Karl Blossfeldt Foundation, we have had access to the true originals of most of these unique photographs. We have produced a series of high quality fine art prints that are as close as possible to the original artwork. We present a selection of art prints, greeting cards and gift tags that can be used in your home or as a perfect gift.
